Rather than do anything with the tax on tobacco and whiskey, it would be much better for congress to give to the soldiers a service pension.

There is a contractor in England who does his business on novel principles. Whenever he finds he makes the highest bid, but already gets the work. He then does it in a thoroughly workmanlike manner, not attempting to cheat in materials or in quality of work. After the job is finished first his profits in excess of ten per cent above the cost, he returns the money. The people who are willing to pay a fair price for a good piece of work of course greatly prefer to employ him and all there are a great many such people, he has plenty of work that he can do.

Dr. Brooks the candidate for vice president on the prohibition ticket boasts that he has been a democrat a short period and one who voted for the democratic ticket for the governorship to thank God he had never been a republican. Some republicans who know him are equally thankful. The republicans who propose to vote the prohibition ticket want to thus voice about the candidate for vice president, who considers it much worse to have been a supporter of Abraham Lincoln than to have been a slaveholder or traitor.

Mr. Blaine sees how unwise the republicans were at the national convention. An effort was made by the Kelley-McKinley crowd to have him use his influence against the preparation of any platform, but he very wisely refused to do so, and the policy of the senate fit about time for Mr. McKinley and Mr. Kelley to stop trying to represent the republican party on the platform question, for while they managed to have the republican platform represent their views, they have had the mortification of seeing the party repudiate them.

We protect American coal by duty on foreign iron. We protect American wool by duty on foreign wool. We place restrictions on every foreign product that can come into competition with home products. Why should we not, then, place some restrictions on foreign labor, which comes here in competition with American labor? We have a great deal to say about our Amrif products, but not one word about protecting particularly and directly the protection of American capital invested in certain industries. Most of the working people in this country are employed in work that does not receive any help from protection. The only law which directly protects labor is that which limits Chinese immigration. It is remarkable that none of our statesmen have made any declaration on this subject, though all the while professing extraordinary devotion to the interests of the laboring men. The platforms of the different parties expressed an opinion on most every conceivable subject, but no one of them has declared in favor of a general law restricting immigration. There are declarations against Chinese immigration because the Chinaman cannot vote; but there are none in favor of the restriction of the immigration from Italy, Poland, Germany, Ireland and England because these emigrants vote when they get here. The interests of the laboring men of this country demand the restriction of immigration. We cannot afford to have every poorhouse in Europe and all the slums of her great cities pouring their refuse here to be rated as the equals of our laboring people.

THUMB NAIL SKETCHES

A Few Facts About the Art of Acting.

[Special Correspondence.]

LONDON, July 9. Sara Bernhardt, with all her strong-mindedness, is superstitious as the silliest of her professional sisters. The reading of her play "La Tosca" was fixed for a Friday. She flatly refused to attend, and at length overcame the superstition by a put off to a "lucky" day. Then she would not let with at yours, for when Sardou had carefully written a part, because he had "an evil eye." Sara will have nothing to do with any one who squints. Another actor had to be substituted. When she played in "Macbeth" she insisted that the witches' words would bring her misfortune, and it had to be struck out. Adelina Patti dreads the "evil eye," and nothing could force her to sing before a one-eyed conductor. She swears that Offenbach, who lost this affliction brought bad luck with him wherever he went, and she cites in proof the fatal fire in the Paris Opera house during the early performances of one of Offenbach's ballets, and the sudden death of Mme. Bertholon while singing in another of his pieces. Jean Hading is a believer in the "red face of the No. 13."

Large fortunes are not now being made in England, and the probabilities are that they never will be. The great manufacturers of Lancashire and Yorkshire made their wealth during the period following the development of the steam engine and the introduction of free trade, extending from 1840 to 1870. These men have been dying out very fast in recent years, and last year thinned the ranks of the survivors very considerably. Among them were Sir Joseph Whitworth, the engineer and gun maker, who left $1,605,000. It must be remembered that these figures represent the personalty only, exclusive of real estate. Samuel Fox, inventor and maker of the "paragon" umbrella frame, left $500,000. Mr. Stothart, a Liverpool merchant, left $2,170,000; Mr. U. F. Barbour, a Manchester shipper of cotton, $2,920,000, and Mr. Schilizzi, a Greek shipper in the same city, $1,165,000. Alderman Rose, of Manchester, made $750,000 by trade. [illegible] left $2,000,000, and James Barlow, in the same line, $750,000; Jesse Fielden, a Yorkshire worsted spinner, left $2,500,000; Mr. Perrin, the lucky grocer who patented Lea & Perrin's Worcestershire sauce, left $3,225,000 all made out of sales. The largest fortune left by a Birmingham manufacturer was that of Mr. Middlemore, $800,000; two big railway contractors, George Benton and Charles Waring, left $3,025,000 and $2,750,000 respectively; John Swift, the Welsh coal owner, left $1,925,000. Among bankers John H. Smith left $1,045,000, and Charles Cain $3,070,000. Octavius E. Coope, the famous London brewer, left $7,210,000, and Mr. Buckle, of Mentz & Co., left a similar amount; Mr. Thomas Watson, the silk manufacturer, left $910,000, and the Right Honorable I. K. Cross, one of Mr. Gladstone's ministers, who hanged himself with a fishing line, made $1,650,000 in his cotton factory. Sir A. Mathieson left $3,775,000 besides an enormous estate in Scotland. He had made his money in the China trade. Lord Wolverton, partner in Glynn's bank; W. Russell Sturgis, W. Hugh McCalmont and Baron Stern left over $15,000,000 each. They made their plunder in the money market, and it was exceedingly kind of them to leave a few crumbs for their less lucky successors in finance jugglery.

Longevity runs with the English aristocracy, the average age of the English nobility shows an average of over 70 years of age. Last year showed that 53 had completed their tenth year, 8 their 100th year, 6 women died having completed their 99th year, 8 their 97th, 6 their 98th, 4 their 99th, 2 their 100th, 1 her 102d and 1 man in his 103d. The old lady who died in her 101st year was Mrs. Anne Penelope Hoare, mother of two or three generations of bankers. Mrs. Charlotte Pigot, aged 102, was a clergyman's widow, and the patriarch, aged 103, was Donald Yuille, of Kilfinan, Argyleshire. The birth registers in all these cases are perfectly authentic.

PRESIDENT OF HONDURAS.

Louis Bogran and the Country He Is the Ruler of.

[Special Correspondence.]

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 6.—Here is a portrait of Genl. Louis Bogran, president of the republic of Honduras. President Bogran was in 1883 elected to fill the vacancy caused by President Soto, and in 1887 Bogran was elected for a second term.

LOUIS BOGRAN.

The [illegible] are the English and the Germans. They profited by trading with the people of the South American republic, but confined no benefit. It was only when the inhabitants of North America began to take an interest that any permanent good to accrue. The products to be obtained are coffee, hides, coffee and mahogany. Besides these are valuable gold and silver mines. The North Americans who [illegible] into rivers have been reading in these articles to many cases remain citizens, and are valuable in developing the country.

Honduras has a long line of coast on the Pacific ocean, its principal northern ports are Omoa, Puerto Cortez and Trujillo. Its Pacific port is Amapala, on Tigre island. An interoceanic railroad was long projected but has not yet been finished. During the past year a portion of it has been completed and formed with a view to its completion. When the road is built it will open up a valuable country especially productive in mahogany, immense forests of which line the route of the road.

Society is very gay in Tegucigalpa, the capital. At balls, upon entering the salon, each guest is given eggshells, prettily decorated, containing gold and silver dust. It is expected that they will be used as "favors" are used in the German cotillion. A gentleman who wishes to show a special attention to a lady throws the shell at her, which breaks and the [illegible] falls over her. The ladies use the missiles in the same way. Thus the performance culminates, and it is expected that one having one of these little weapons poked at his face will stand and take it without wincing.

The people of Honduras are rapidly developing. They are becoming educated, and this brings its attendant benefits. Its mines are in many portions of the country still undeveloped, and the opening of highways into the interior will develop them and other valuable interests.

MARY JANE'S LETTER.

She Advises Young Ladies Not to Become Government Clerks.

[Special Correspondence.]

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9. Not a great while ago a young lady wrote to me asking if I would not use my influence in helping her to get a position in one of the departments in Washington. She was not obliged to work, but she had passed the civil service examination and wanted to be independent of her father.

"Very laudable," you say.

"Possibly," say I.

I wrote to her to the effect that I was glad to hear she desired to get a place here, because I would make it my particular business to prevent the accomplishment of her purpose.

And why?

Because no young woman, unless compelled by poverty or having helpless ones dependent upon her, should take a department position. I might put this except such a life with those of own families in Washington. A young woman from a distance comes here a stranger and takes up her habitation in a boarding house. I know how girls away from the capital build castles on the foundations of hearsay, and imagine if they were here with $900 or $1,200 a year, and only seven hours' work a day, then their lives would be a continual round of social enjoyment and indulgence in the numerous [illegible]. The salaries paid are so much lower than those of similar positions elsewhere that government work seems to [illegible] which, by the mere rubbing, brings all sorts of pleasures, or rather the gold which may procure them. With this sort of a notion in her inexperienced head the girl comes from a comfortable home and good social position in her country town and enters upon the drudgery of her life. A month in a Washington boarding house, and the dream is not quite so pleasant as it was. There [illegible] in the office, backbiting by her fellow clerks if she happens to prove a favorite, and ripped from her superiors if she is slow to learn or shows a desire to make a social fight. I have heard it stated that "department people" are quite as welcome in society as the rich and great of earth, but I have yet to see it exemplified in fact. Young women from some of the very oldest and best families in the United States hold positions in the departments, but I have never seen their names mentioned as society belles, as I have often seen the names of others who are quite as poor, but are not in the departments. If they essay the social role they are not snubbed outright; because in a democratic capital that would never do, but the fact that one young lady is in the departments is known just as that another is an heiress, and ever after there is that inexpressible something not comme il faut which people always recognize but never attempt to explain. It is this morning in a shadow which chills all the better part of a woman's nature and makes her in a very short time cold, cynical and heartless. There are temptations also, more maternally serious in their results, if yielded to; but I am glad to say they are the rare exception, and the percentage of woman's weakness is no higher, I believe, than among an equal number of women in other walks of life. There are a few glaring examples, it is true, but the zeal of general condemnation is stamped upon them, and official favor alone prevents expurgation.

I presume there is no class of women in the world more discontented than are these in the departments. Envyings prevail constantly, and there is even a reaching for something not in their possession, a grasping for a salary higher than that which they have and which, before they received, appeared to be more than enough for all their wants. Except to those residing in Washington there is no home feeling, and the constantly changing life of the capital has its effect in making of these women uncertain, vacillating, inconstant creatures, to whom in time home is a disagreeable restraint and domestic care a galling yoke.

My advice to every girl who wants to come to Washington is don't. Stay at home on one-third or one half the money if you do not care to be a dead expense to your parents; teach school, stay in a store, be a typewriter, anything respectable except coming into the departments at Washington, where the round is the same yesterday, today and forever; where earnest endeavor meets fallit recognition, and where every laudable ambition buds only to be blighted.

There is another side to this picture, but I say few look upon it that it would scarcely be recognized should I turn it out, and I will let it remain face to the wall, with the hope that what I have written will prove of benefit to some of the many hundreds of young women who look upon Washington as the "Mecca of all their hopes, and may turn them into a better way.

MARY JANE.

Lord Lewis swallowed a [illegible] crown piece at Chicago while on [illegible] an amateur [illegible] performance. It is still in his [illegible] stomach. When [illegible] father told me a [illegible] about his [illegible] health I [illegible] and [illegible] the accident. "Ah," said the other, "that makes £11 2s 6d."

Neglected tea stains are the soul of the careful housewife, who finds it almost impossible to get them out. Such stains should be soaked in either milk or warm water as soon as possible, and then scalded and rubbed out. The next washing will efface them wholly.

The cricket match to-morrow, by agreement between the captains of the two elevens, will end at 5.15 p. m., and our street car company has arranged to concentrate their cars at that time at the corner of Nevada avenue and Cache la Poudre street for the convenience of those of the spectators who may wish to ride home.

We wish to render honor to whom honor is due. The following subscriptions have been received since publishing the list: W. F. Anderson, $100; J. K. Fical, $25.

The Rev. Dean Hart and the Rev. Mr. Arundel are active members of the Denver cricket club. Mr. Arundel is expected to play on the Denver eleven against our Colorado Springs club on Saturday, and many of our citizens will be glad to welcome his visit to us, remembering the many eloquent sermons he has delivered in our churches, and his excellent social traits.

Of Mrs. Lillie Devereux Blake, the woman suffrage advocate, who lectures in this city on August 23, on the subject, "Is it a Crime to be a Woman," the Scotia (Neb.) Times has the following: "She is a speaker of accuracy and elegance. We have never heard better language or similes before. A master of pure English, ready with unassuming yet scintillating wit, saying what she desires to say with only the exact number of words necessary to say it, with all the enthusiasm of her sex for the rights of her sex, and commiseration for their wrongs, she uttered in faultless language the arguments in favor of their cause."

The committee on arrangements of Myrtle lodge Knights of Pythias of this city selected to make preparations for the meeting of the grand lodge of the state in this city on September 19th and 19th has issued a circular asking financial assistance in the entertainment of the members of the order who will be here at that time. It is expected that about a thousand persons will be in attendance and as the advantage of having so many strangers in the city at one time and also of encouraging the assembling of such bodies in this place can be readily seen, it is hoped that the citizens will respond liberally. It is proposed to raise a purse of $150 as a "citizens' prize" to be contested for at a competitive drill of all the uniformed divisions of the state. Subscriptions can be made to members of the finance committee which is composed of J. J. Franklin, E. A. Maygold, E. C. Bartlett, C. A. Stein, and J. H. Thiebaud.
